1 B. Political Trading Cards Before the World of Politics Inserts

2 3. Trading cards are small cards made out of paperboard or cardstock, 3 usually containing an image of a certain person, place or thing and a short 4 description of the picture, along with other text, commonly statistics or trivia.
5 Trading cards are traditionally associated with sports, especially baseball. The first 6 trading cards were found in retail products like cigarette packets, starting in the late-
7 1800's running through WWI (known as the "Tobacco Era")¹. Companies initially 8 did not sell the cards themselves, but used them as a promotional tool to sell more of 9 their product.

10 4. Political and historically themed trading cards are not a new concept.
11 During the Tobacco Era, manufacturers featured a wide array of topical content on 12 trading cards, most famously depicting baseball players, but also including 13 presidents, generals, leaders of industry, actors and actresses, state flags, animals and 14 scenes of nature. Trading card production went largely dormant between 1920 and 15 1932, but became wildly popular in the early 1930's when the Goudey Company 16 released the first-ever standalone trading card products, most notably with their 17 Baseball and Indians Gum Card products released in 1933. By the late 1930's, 18 standalone trading card products covered a wide array of thematic content including 19 G-Men and war. Of note, the 1938 Horrors of War trading card product featured 20 graphic depictions of atrocities associated with WWII, including some of the only 21 cards made to date depicting Adolf Hitler.

28 Almanac") Referenced pages of the Beckett Almanac are attached hereto as Exhibit

1 5. The end of WWII ushered in the “Golden Age” of trading cards when 2 in 1951 the New York-based Topps Company started releasing products. Most 3 famously known for their still-ongoing baseball card products, Topps also produced
4 a wide array of other trading card sets outside of the sporting realm including 5 notable personalities and historical figures in its Look N See product released in 6 1952 and a set devoted entirely to U.S. Presidents in 1956².

18 By 1981, two companies, Donruss and Fler managed to break Topps’ monopoly on 19 the trading card business by releasing competitive baseball card products.

20 6. In 1989, the Upper Deck Company (“Upper Deck”) ushered in the 21 modern era of trading cards with their premium products featuring printing
22 techniques and photography. By the early 1990’s, the major trading card
23 manufacturers, Donruss, Fler, Topps and Upper Deck, were producing nationwide
24 trading card releases featuring baseball, basketball, football and hockey. Though

1 sports-themed trading cards captured the majority of the limelight throughout the 2 1990's and 2000's, entertainment and "non-sport" cards, dominated by 3 entertainment licenses like Marvel and Star Wars, have continued to have a rich and 4 diverse history with standalone products and in more recent times, even spiked into 5 mainstream sports-themed products as complimentary content.

6 7. Most notably, in the early 2000's Topps and Upper Deck produced a 7 run of trading cards featuring all of the U.S. Presidents with "cut signatures," which 8 are actual signatures clipped from historical documents and embedded into the 9 trading cards, that proved to be popular with consumers.

10 8. In 2008, seizing the opportunity of heavy media coverage in an election 11 year, Upper Deck created satirical cards entitled "Presidential Predictors" that were 12 spiked as random inserts within an array of their 2008 baseball products, featuring 13 all of the presidential candidates for the 2008 election. The cards were issued with 14 varying rates of scarcity, and were very popular upon release, with some card selling 15 for several hundred dollars each³.

16 9. In the modern trading card industry, political or historically themed 17 cards are almost always inserts, like the Upper Deck 2008 Presidential Predictors
18 rather than standalone products. The difference between an insert and a standalone 19 product is that an insert set is a small number of cards within a product, typically 20 seeded at far scarcer rates than the common cards that compose the base set of a 21 product. For example, the World of Sports product features a 300-400 card base set 22 and an array of insert sets including autograph cards, technology cards and thematic 23 chase cards. To put insert cards in context with a standalone product, a standard box 24 of modern era trading cards can contain 24 packs, with each pack containing eight 25 cards. Within each pack, base cards comprise six, seven or even all eight of the 26 cards. Insert cards are typically seeded cumulatively at a rate of around one card per

27

28 ³ See infra, ¶¶ 14-16; Beckett Almanac, p. 1172.

1 pack, but it is common practice for the insert cards to have wildly different seeding
2 ratios amongst one another.

3 10. In the modern era, of the major manufacturers, Panini, Topps, and 4 Upper Deck, there was only one product that was a standalone line of political 5 trading cards. In 2009, Topps released a 90-card boxed set focused exclusively on 6 President Barak Obama.

7 11. One of the benefits of producing political trading cards or inserts is that 8 they have a lower production cost. U.S. political figures typically fall within public 9 domain, thus can be featured on trading cards without having to pay for 10 image/licensing rights.

11 12. Upper Deck has developed several political/historically themed trading 12 card inserts.

13 a. In 2003, Upper Deck created an array of Presidential Cut Signatures, 14 featuring actual signatures from each U.S. President clipped from 15 historical documents⁴.

b. In 2008, Upper Deck created the Hair Cut Signatures line of cards, which featured a famous historical or political figure along with a reproduction of his or her signature⁵.

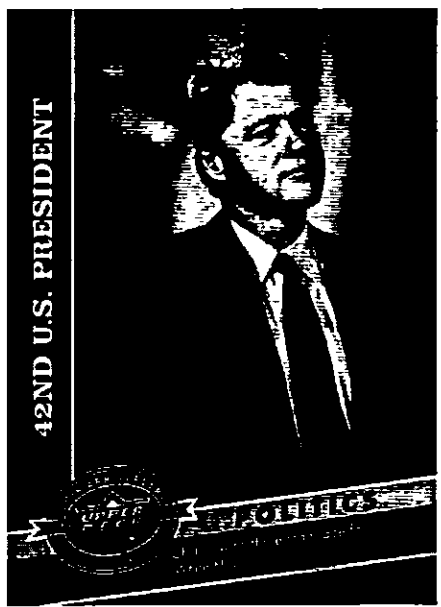

c. In 2008, Upper Deck created the satirical Presidential Predictor cards which proved to be extremely popular during the election year, deftly handling potentially controversial content and balancing supply with demand⁶.

d. In 2009, Upper Deck released a 500-card set entitled “20th Anniversary” to celebrate their 20th year in business. The set featured historically significant subjects and moments from sports, history and politics spanning 1989-2009. Political subjects within this set included Ronald Reagan, George H. Bush, Bill Clinton, Al Gore, Colin Powell, Condaleeza Rice and George W. Bush⁷.

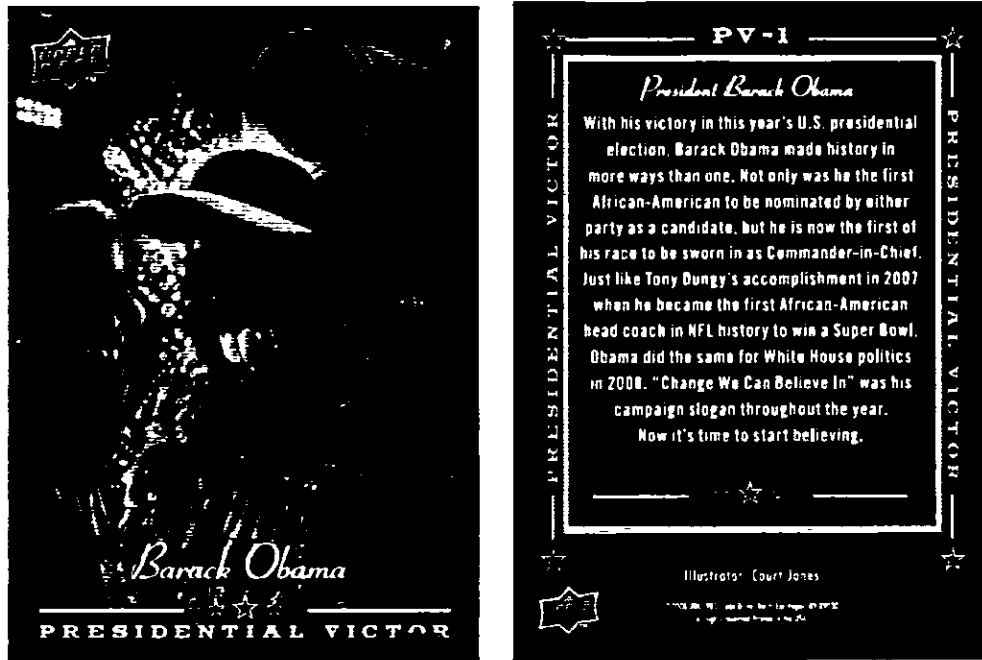

13. In 2008, Upper Deck developed trading card inserts for its line of baseball products throughout the year called “Presidential Predictors.” (See infra, ¶¶ 8, 12(c).) The Presidential Predictors featured caricatures of the presidential candidates running for election in 2008. The Presidential Predictors were popular and helped sell the 2008 Upper Deck Baseball cards and had inherent value on the secondary market⁸.

⁷ See UD000590-603.
⁸ See UD000524-26; see also Beckett Almanac, p. 1172.

1 15. After the 2008 election, as part of the Presidential Predictors line,
2 Upper Deck developed a "Presidential Victor" card, which commemorated President
3 Barak Obama's election. The Presidential Victor card was not sold as a standalone
4 product or insert, but was distributed as a promotional card to hobby shops 5 nationwide⁹.

17 16. Upper Deck's success with the Presidential Predictor inserts was 18 extraordinary and was fueled by the media frenzy concerning the 2008 Election.
19 The cards themselves garnered attention from the national media. The Presidential 20 Predictor inserts drove sales of the 2008 Upper Deck Baseball cards, with some of 21 the more rare Presidential Predictor cards selling for hundreds of dollars on the 22 secondary market.

1 C. Development of the World of Politics Inserts in the World of Sports Line

2 17. Starting in 2010, Upper Deck developed a line of trading cards called
 3 “World of Sports” cards (“2010 WOS”). They featured college and national athletes
 4 from a wide variety of sports. The 2010 WOS cards did not sell as well as expected.
 5 Upper Deck decided to issue a second release of the World of Sports cards (“2011
 6 WOS”)¹⁰. However, prior to the release of the 2011 WOS cards, Upper Deck
 7 sought a way to increase sales¹¹.

17 18. I was not specifically assigned to work on the 2010 or 2011 WOS
 18 product. However, in August 2011, Upper Deck Product Manager Gregg Kohn, 19 who was in charge of developing the 2011 WOS product, approached myself and 20 other Upper Deck personnel about a picture of Michele Bachmann infamously 21 eating a corn dog that was making waves online¹². Kohn felt there was an 22 opportunity to latch on to the media buzz surrounding the “corn dog” picture and do 23 an entire series of trading card inserts featuring candidates eating food on the 24 campaign trail and capitalize on the election like Upper Deck did with the 2008

25
26 ¹⁰ The 2011 WOS cards were slated for release in 2011, though due to production
 27 delays, they were not actually released until 2012.

28 ¹¹ See UD002891-2903.

13 19. To my knowledge, prior to the development of the WOP Inserts, Kohn 14 was never shown the Executive Trading materials. I did not discuss any part of the 15 Executive Trading cards with Kohn prior to the development of the WOP Inserts.

16 D. The Executive Trading Cards are Significantly Different from the World
17 of Politics Inserts

18 20. There are fundamental and significant differences between the Upper 19 Deck WOP Inserts and the Executive Trading Cards ("ET Cards").

2012 COMEDIC WOP

2009 ET CARDS

- a. ET Cards were produced as a standalone product solely depicting political figures. The WOP Inserts were a peripheral element of the overall content of the 2011 WOS product.
 - i. The significance of this distinction is evident when you examine what a consumer would have to do to theoretically receive a WOP Insert.
 - ii. WOP Inserts were randomly seeded at a rate of one card in every 40 packs of the 2011 WOS product. That meant consumers had to spend around $160 (using the manufactures suggested retail price (“MSRP”) of $3.99 per sealed pack) to get one WOP card.
 - iii. Given that each pack of 2011 WOS pack featured six cards means that only one in every 240 cards produced was a WOP Insert (0.004% of the total cards in the product).
- b. ET Cards featured in-depth checklists of already elected or appointed members of Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches of the United States government. On the other hand WOP Inserts, like the 2008 Presidential Predictors inserts, only featured presidential candidates running for office in 2012.

1 c. ET Cards included educational content on the card backs like political 2 statistics measuring voting records and the margin of win in their last 3 election. WOP Inserts included only a brief biographical sentence or 4 two featuring the candidate's political background.

5 iv. ET Cards were educational in nature and would appeal to a 6 customer wanting to learn about elected/appointed government
7 officials.

8 v. On the other hand, WOP Inserts contained scant educational 9 information and appealed to customers who were interested in the 10 media and pop culture surrounding the 2012 Presidential 11 Election.

12 d. All of the ET Cards used the same format and were serious in nature.
13 ET did produce a series of "Rookie Cards"¹³ featuring newly elected
14 officials, but they were still humorless. Half of the WOP Inserts 15 contained standard portrait style headshots depicting the candidates the 16 other half were produced in a lighthearted tone, featuring candidates 17 pictured unflatteringly eating a variety of fast foods while on the 18 campaign trail ("Comedic WOP Inserts").

19 vi. The WOP Inserts were never marketed as Rookie Cards.

20 vii. The Comedic WOP Inserts were more rare cards being randomly 21 inserted with lesser frequency than the standard portrait cards.

22 21. Executive Trading alleges that the idea for the Comedic WOP Inserts 23 was stolen by Upper Deck. Specifically, Executive Trading claims that having 24 comically themed inserts as a subset of a broader insert is its original concept.

26 _____
27 ¹³ ET tried to replicate the concept of sports rookie cards, which depict athletes in 28 their first year after turning professional, which have been a core product driver in sports trading cards for more than 30 years.

1 However, having different types of inserts supporting a broader product is a concept
2 that existed before Executive Trading. Some examples include:

- 3 a. 2008 Upper Deck Presidential Predictors (Upper Deck)
- 4 b. 1989 Bush League Trading Cards (Eclipse Enterprises)

- 13 c. 1991 Wacky Packages (Topps)
- 14 d. 1985 Garbage Pail Kids (Topps)

15 E. The Marketability of the Executive Trading Cards and Upper Deck's
16 Decision Not to Pursue a Standalone Line of Political Trading Cards

17 22. Executive Trading is the only entity to attempt to produce a trading card
18 product focused exclusively on current-day political figures. It attempted, with little 19 success, to establish attributes inherent to sports trading cards, including using the 20 concept statistics and rookie cards to drive sales of the ET Cards.

21 23. One way to gauge the marketability, interest, and value in a particular 22 line of cards is to examine their performance in the secondary-market. Ebay is the 23 card industry's dominant secondary-market sales platform.

- 24 a. Between August 26, 2013 and January 17, 2014, Executive Trading had 25 only 23 "closed auction" items listed on eBay within their Trading 26 Cards category. Of those listings, 14 of the 23 items sold for $1.09 or 27 less. Of the items listed above $1.09, only two of the nine items

28

1 garnered a bid and were sold. Printouts of this website are attached
2 hereto as Exhibit "B".

3 b. As of January 17, 2014, Executive Trading only had four items listed
4 on eBay among all current auctions. Executive Trading cards are 5 essentially invisible to the trading card collector. Printouts of this 6 website are attached hereto as Exhibit "C".

7 24. In short, Executive Trading's standalone line of political trading cards
8 was not a lucrative endeavor and the cards have little value and very low consumer 9 demand in the secondary-market. In 2011, Josh Zusman and I were assigned to 10 work with Executive Trading to determine whether Upper Deck wanted to pursue a 11 standalone line of political trading cards. By the time that I was assigned to work 12 with Executive Trading, Gregg Kohn and his team had already come up with the 13 idea for the WOP Inserts.

14 25. As part of our evaluation of pursuing a relationship with Executive 15 Trading, Upper Deck reached out to its network of distributors to gauge interest in 16 the idea of a stand-alone line of political trading cards and to determine the potential 17 sales levels. The feedback Upper Deck received from its distributors indicated that 18 sales volumes would not merit production because of lack of interest in the concept.
19 That is the reason Upper Deck decided not to pursue a relationship with Executive 20 Trading. The development of the WOP Inserts had no bearing on that decision.

21 F. Failure of the World of Politics Inserts to Increase Sales of the World of 22 Sports Product

23 26. The WOP Inserts were intended to boost sales of the 2011 WOS line.
24 Upper Deck did not experience any discernible increase in sales in the 2011 WOS
25 line, let alone any increase that can be attributed to the inclusion of the WOP Inserts.
26 There are several reasons for this.

27 a. The WOP Inserts were a very peripheral element of the 2011 WOS line, 28 with only one in every 40 packs containing a WOP Insert.

1 b. The WOP Inserts were never mentioned on the 2011 WOS box or 2 wrapper packaging or in the 2011 WOS solicitation materials.

3 c. The focus of the 2011 WOS line was a checklist of 375 athletes
4 including superstars Michael Jordan, Wayne Gretzky, and Tiger
5 Woods. There was also the potential to find special autographed cards
6 from top athletes. The potential to find these cards drove sales and were 7 the emphasis of Upper Deck's marketing of the cards, not the WOP
8 Inserts. For example, eBay searches of Upper Deck cards for these 9 prominent athletes can sometimes sell for hundreds of dollars¹⁴.

10 27. A sealed 24-pack hobby box of Upper Deck's 2011 WOS line, 11 originally carrying an MSRP of $96, is selling for as little as $48.95 per box in the 12 secondary market¹⁵

13 28. The 2011 WOS line was a failed product and the WOP Inserts had no 14 discernible effect on their lackluster sales. That is why Upper Deck discontinued the 15 line.

16
17 I declare under penalty of perjury that the above is true and correct. Signed 18 January 17, 2014 in San Diego, California.
